But this browser claims to be the world's first mobile browser loading. But can you really make money with mCent Browser? This is what I was determined to learn. I was told about this browser does not ago and I had to check it out for myself. Making money with mCent Browser App The first step is to always look at the app itself. As for the first screen, everything looked pretty good. It has 4.4 stars on Google Play and has accumulated over 5 million downloads. Honestly, I was surprised that I hadn't heard of it before. The company calls it a mobile charging app... but I wasn't sure what that meant. I took it to mean that you can charge your phone data or something like that, but I wasn't sure. So I did a little digging and looked in the Read More section to see if I could understand it. My question was answered almost immediately, with the first paragraph of the application description. Here's what he said... Ok, so this app basically allows you to charge your phone's data by earning points. Well, to say that they are points is putting it a bit too simply. First, you earn points. Then you list these points on Rupee (that's what it says in Read More). Then you can replace the rupees with a mobile top-up. I was very interested to see if I would be able to fill my mobile service using this browser. I was also interested to see if I could earn in my points for a different kind of reward. I mean, mobile fill-ups are fine, but the real point is finding a decent side-hustle and bustle that I can use to earn extra money. My thoughts on the idea of AppAlright browser, quickly before we get into the app itself, I wanted to share my ideas on what I hoped this app would deliver. I like the idea of a mobile browser app because it could theoretically allow me to make money on things I already do... like browsing Facebook, watching videos, visiting websites, etc. From the way I understood it, it would not be too eme much different from using Google Chrome or my phone's mobile browser... except that the browser will be slightly different, and I'll make money in exchange for a company tracking my browsing habits (Bing actually does something similar). The browser itself had a fairly legit list of features that you can check out in the app auction. But they don't really seem like a pretty good list! I understand that some people may have privacy concerns about this. And to be honest, the company didn't really give me any privacy information in the app description... so I was a little left to think about it. I mean, I assume an app like this really protects your privacy... but I still had to understand it, exactly. I did a little more digging, trying to figure it out, and ended up getting the full discourse on the privacy policy page of the app auction. Here's a link so you can take a look at this: collect Up to passwords. But then again, it's a browser. They also say they collect information regardless of whether the app is in use no, though I'm not sure exactly how much they collect when the app isn't in use. Anyway, I'll admit it made me a little miserable. I mean, I'm not usually paranoid about things like that, but that scared me a little bit. But well. If I needed to, I could just uninstall the app, right? That's what I decided to do if I didn't like it because I really want to try it out. So yes. My next step was to download it and try it. Downloading the mCent browser app the download was 46.26MB, so it's not too big. It only took a few minutes to be started. My first impression of the browser was that it seemed clean-cut. It was very simple designed at first. I liked it. It almost looked empty, but I had no problem with it. Then I was taken to a site where I was told that a limited number of people are experiencing the mCent early access stage. I filled out my mobile phone number along with my email address and was quickly displayed on this screen. It was a little unexpected. I wouldn't know what the app auction said that only some people would be able to use it. I went back to the auction to see if I could find any reference to this at all. I read read more again and even said it in the last paragraph. Download mCent Browser now and earn mobile rewards today! So I wasn't really sure what was going on. I wasn't sure how much time I would have to give. Will I have to wait for hours, days, weeks or months? I decided to take a look at the reviews to see what else I could find. Here's a summary of what I found there. Checking out mCent Browser App ReviewsI took two reviews at the very beginning of my research that seemed pretty down in the app... and both for the same reason. Here's what they said. Everything was so good and suddenly you become the devil. –mCent Browser user (Note: This little passage above, ahem, cough ... is the best thing I've seen written on the internet for a long time. Just saying it.) So yes. If these reviews are any real indication of the problem, then it seems that mCent has its hands full. I continued my search and came across these reviews a bit... There are some real gems here. I have to give it to mCent userbase ... They are one unhappy crowd, apparently, and don't seem afraid to really talk about how they feel. I mean, don't get me wrong, there are also positive feedback... but it seems that the highest percentage of recent reviews were definitely negative. It seems that the app has made some kind of change lately. Many reviewers complain that their points per day have fallen significantly with a delay. But even more than that, it seems that at least from the beginning of 2018 (this review was written on January 24, 2018), the company does not offer and will not create a payout feature. Take a look at the now it just takes it to a whole new level. This poor user didn't even mention the monetary compensation feature in the review. But it seems that this company, thanks to the kindness of its heart, made some kind of auto-react and used the answer, which they have already used for another question. I'm glad they said something about not making monetary compensation options. I'm just surprised he said something when the question wasn't asked. My personal feelings about mCent Browser So farI am not an expert in this application. I didn't even get to use it. But based on the latest reviews from 2018 about it (and there are quite a few), I just can't imagine us ever wanting to try it. I love the idea of making money from web browsing, but it seems that there are a lot of serious problems here that I just can't overcome. First, I can't join the site because there's no place. Secondly, there appears to be no possibility of monetary compensation. And since I don't know if my mobile operator (which is actually a fairly obscure carrier, unfortunately) will be served, this is a pretty big problem. If my carrier isn't supported, this app won't work for me anyway. And thirdly, there are so many negative reviews that have been published in the last week. It's as if they've been in flooded with negative reviews, and most of them seem to say the same thing. I'm not sure what's going on with this app. I hope it worked out because I like the idea. But I'm also afraid that this attempt was a bit of a disaster. I uninstalled the app and don't plan to try it again until I hear that everything has changed. Our recent thoughts about mCent Browser AppShould download it and use it to earn extra money? What about ladies and dudes! Great to finally meet you, and I hope you enjoyed this post.
